Lernziele / Kompetenzen The aim of the course is to heighten the participants' awareness of such sonic phenomenon as it relates to tonal preferences and how it may connect to other art forms.

Inhalte The Play Head, provides an historical introduction to music and sound recording over the last 150 years.

The course will survey the development of recording technologies and the associated sonic artefacts that have broadened our perceptions of natural acoustical spaces throughout the 20th century.

With wax cylinders, shellac, vinyl, magnetic tape as the main archive materials for recording over that span of time, we will take a deeper look at some of the intrinsic properties and artefacts associated with such materials. As well, compare it in opposition to current digital hard disk recording positions.

Further discussions relating to cognitive psychology and the effects that personal expectations, prejudices, and predispositions may have on listeners' relative evaluations and comparisons of sonic aesthetics from such recording materials will be pursued.

William (Billy) Davis is a composer, recording artist, music producer and founder of workhorsesong studio in Berlin.
