Lernziele / Kompetenzen	We will analyze "Guernica", in it's historical and artistic context – we will question "the surface" of the picture and try to connect it with (and rethink) the political power of theatre today...
Inhalte	Guernica is one of the most important pieces of visual art created in the twentieth century. It is a picture that you can have for a turning point in the life of Pablo Picasso, which – although it is upon its realization have already celebrated the 55. birthday – right after Guernica become a political artist, and an important figure within the left political movement. Picasso was initially experiencing the creative blockade. At the beginning of the thirties he was experiencing personal, creative crisis and a crisis of his own socio-political orientation. But the bombing of Guernica 26. in April 1937 change this. It is an image that, as a product of the Spanish Civil War, calls for rethinking the prelude to the Second World War and the collision of totalitarian ideologies that marked the postwar period. After the First World War all the great painters found that the idea of the avant-garde, which was supposed to change the world, was utopian and that it would not work. When the pre-war tension began, the artists realized that they had to step out of their imaginary world, out of their room, in order to cope with the world and talk about it in a much more explicit way. Picasso began to transform his painting right under these guidelines. To do this, he had to step outside. He had to step out of the security of his own space, from his petite bourgeoisie, from the frames of the first avant-garde. He broke the idea of a dead, intimate nature that is self-sufficient. It breaks up with theatrical nature when the characters begin to disintegrate...
