Inhalte	Similar to the way we use to walk through display-situations in art spaces, we nowadays navigate through networked displays on our multiple technological devices. One of the leading questions of this seminar is to understand how networked displays are anticipated as a dynamic presentation format by artists, in order to actively participate in a circulative "image power". In a new pictorial logic of networked displays, in which the dimensions of production, circulation and consumption are intertwined and in which everyone and everything becomes an image, as well as a technological spectacle, the seminar asks, what new modes of antagonisms art can set in motion. Based on selected discursive positions related to questions of the image and its circulation (for example Peter Osborne, David Joselit, Claire Bishop) as well as to questions dealing with the performativity of images within the context of normative, hegemonic identity-constructions (for example Judith Butler; Paul B. Preciado und Legacy Russel among others), the seminar seeks to analyze those contemporary (technological) power structures – especially in relation to body, gender, sexuality, identity and images. Possible guests: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Brice Dellsperger - Young Girl Reading Group (YGRG) - Lauren Huret About the lecturer:
