Inhalte

Western visual language has long been modeled on the human experience. Images were created to represent the world as it was seen by a single person. Mechanical photography both strengthened this regime by producing vast amounts of images claiming to represent external reality, but it also began to undermine it by separating the capacity to make images from the human eye. In the 1920s, Russian avant-garde director Dsiga Vertov built a visual theory and aesthetics based on this separation and the potential of mechanization.

Today, digital image-making has further unsettled the relationship between images and human experience. Ubiquitous pre- and post-processing means that images are to a larger degree generated rather than recorded, often not addressed to humans, but used for automated processes. More over, contemporary realities have become so complex, abstract, and stretched out over time and space that the individual visual experience is less and less capable to make sense of it. After all, how much can documentary photography reveal about data-centers or climate change?

In this module, we are investigating visual theory and artistic approaches that, like Vertov 100 years ago, respond to these contemporary challenges by creating a new type "realism", which the artist Paolo Cirio calls "evidentiary" – visual language able to account for the reality we are living in. We are, among others, focusing on works by Trevor Paglen, Suzanne Treister, Marc Lombardi, and Forensic Architecture.

Felix Stalder (*1968) is a professor in the BA Fine Arts. His work focuses on the intersections of cultural, political and technological dynamics, in particular on new modes of common-based production, control society, copyright and transformation of subjectivity. He not only works as an academic, but also as a cultural producer, being a moderator of the mailing list <nettime> and a member of the World Information Institute as well as the Technopolitics Working Group (both in Vienna). Among his recent publications are "The Digital Condition" (Polity Press, 2018), "Aesthetics of the Commons" (co-editor, Diaphanes, 2021), and "Digital Unconscious" (co-editor, Autonomedia, 2021), <https://fs.zhdk.ch> <https://felix.openflows.com>
